

Screenwriter David Misch (“Mork & Mindy,” “The Muppets Take Manhattan,” “Duckman,” “Police Squad!”, “Saturday Night Live,” “Funny: The Book”) presents a class about comedy which is guaranteed to impart no usable skills.

Okay, that could be an exaggeration but David’s given that guarantee at Sony Pictures, DreamWorks, Disney, Lucasfilm, Writers Guild, Second City, the Groundlings, the Actors Studio, Columbia University, Yale, Oxford, Austin Film Festival, American Film Institute, CineStudio Paris, University of Sydney and the VIEW Cinema Conference (Torino, Italy).

“How Comedy Works” has no direct instruction but is a critical, and serious (though funny), exploration of comedy as an art form which gives actors, writers, directors, producers and Crafts Service personnel a closeup of comedy’s innards, the idea being that understanding how comedy works will help you work in comedy. Anyway, that’s my story and I’m sticking to it.

Topics include the Rule of 3 (Why are things funnier in threes? Really, why? I mean, why?); the relationship between Comedy and Logic (spoiler alert: they’re bitter enemies); the calculations involved in timing; comedy cues, and why withholding them is sometimes the best way to get a laugh; why your body is hilarious; the evil of punchlines; and how the mechanics of jokes – tension and resolution, pattern recognition, misdirection and surprise – provide a template for all humor.

As for practical applications, the presentation includes copious comedy clips from TV and movies, from Buster Keaton to Monty Python to Bo Burnham, which show how these principles translate into actual laughter. So forget all that stuff about no usable skills.

Satisfied and/or Paid-Off Customers

“David weaves a lifetime of experience into a day-long seminar which was not only informative but truly entertaining, a testament to his storytelling skills.” – Elliot Grove; Founder, Raindance Film Festival (London), British Independent Film Awards

“David did a top-notch job sharing his expertise on comedy. The students truly enjoyed the presentation and it was great to have him with us.” – Lyn Puztasi, The Second City

“It takes a serious mind to analyze comedy. It takes a funny mind to appreciate it. David Misch is of two minds.” – Jason Alexander

“We laughed until our stomachs hurt, our notepads filled and our comedy elevated.” – Caleb McKnight, Austin Film Festival

“David’s illumination of the foundations of comedy is wonderful and inspiring.” – Patricia Meyer, American Film Institute

Unretouched Photo

Among David’s screen credits are “Mork and Mindy,” “Saturday Night Live,” and “The Muppets Take Manhattan.” He’s the author of “Funny: The Book” and has spoken at the Smithsonian, Yale, Sony, Disney, DreamWorks and Lucasfilm, Oxford, Austin Film Festival and the American Film Institute, CineStudio Paris, VIEW Cinema Conference (Torino, Italy), USC and UCLA. Too much more at davidmisch.com.